

Slams Flacke on Crossgates

Editor, Gazette:

*Johann
ope 5/14/81*

Unless the media is presenting a grossly distorted picture, it is becoming increasingly clear that Robert Flacke, commissioner of the Department of Environmental Conservation, is as hellbent on allowing Crossgates to be built as Pyramid is on building it.

First, he overruled the recommendations of the hearing officer — a person commissioned to listen to and study months of testimony and base his judgment on the merits. Then he gave Pyramid time to clean up its act — change its case, as it were, to counter the facts and information presented by the area residents opposing it.

Next, he decided not to reopen the hearings; this prevents the people from having the opportunity to refute this new information face-to-face and cross-examine Pyramid's "experts."

Flacke's bias in handling this case would make more sense if he were the commissioner of commerce. The environmental issues, however, are but some of the reasons why a large majority of the area residents are opposed to Crossgates. Isn't it about time that our government officials, like Flacke, started listening to the people instead of wealthy developers?

TOM MAYER
Albany

His mind made up?

*KP
5/14/81*

To the editor:

It is becoming increasingly clear that Robert Flacke, commissioner of Environmental Conservation, is as bent on allowing Crossgates to be built as Pyramid is on building it.

First, he overruled the recommendations of the hearing officer, a person commissioned to listen to and study months of testimony and base his judgment on the merits presented. Then he gave Pyramid time to clean up its act — change its case, as it were, to counter the facts and information presented by the area residents opposing it. Next, he decided not to reopen the hearings; this prevents the people from having the opportunity to refute this new information face to face and cross-examine Pyramid's "experts."

Mr. Flacke's bias in handling this case would make more sense if he were the commissioner of commerce. The environmental issues, however, are but some of the reasons why a large majority of area residents are opposed to Crossgates. Isn't it about time our government officials start listening to the people instead of wealthy developers?

TOM MAYER
Albany